

Convergence of Domestic Transportation and Global Freight Forwarding

SALT LAKE CITY, UT (January 1, 2008) – Los Angeles-based Dynalink Systems, Inc. recently announced the merging of their business with Salt Lake City-based England Logistics, a wholly owned subsidiary of C.R. England, Inc. Effective January 1, 2008, Dynalink has become part of the C.R. England family of companies. Dynalink is a global third party logistics company specializing in supply chain management and International Ocean and Air forwarding, along with other logistics services.

“We have looked to international opportunities, particularly in China, as an engine that will fuel growth in the U.S.,” said Sean Snow, President of England Logistics. “By moving upstream into China, we will be able to ensure that we control freight flows from origin to destination.”

C.R. England acquired a controlling interest in Dynalink Systems, Inc., though terms of the sale were not disclosed. Founded by Jack and Maureen Chen in 1992, Dynalink sought to create an all inclusive logistics firm that would provide clients with the best rates, along with some of the industry’s most comprehensive services. With offices in Los Angeles, Chicago, New York, and several locations throughout China, Dynalink is a true global logistics company.

Jack Chen feels that the merger with England Logistics provides numerous benefits for both Dynalink’s and England’s customers. “Merging with C.R. England will bring customers the benefits of continued personalized attention combined with greater domestic and international resources and capacity as well as a comprehensive solution for complete supply chain management services,” commented Jack Chen. “With our strength in International air and ocean forwarding and England’s strength in U.S. based transportation services, we’ve added further value to our customer relationships,” said Chen.
